BY TELEGRAPH.

Special dispatch to the Daily Gazette, Madison, Jan. 13.

The supreme court has just decided that the President has no authority to suspend the writ of habeas corpus in Wisconsin. The court was unanimous in the decision.

From Vicksburg, Jan. 12.

We have at last some account of the attack upon Vicksburg. Sherman had under his command some fifty western regiments. The first collision took place on Saturday, the 23rd ult., the result of which was not serious. The attack was made after landing from the Yazoo river, under the cover of gunboats. On Sunday the battle was renewed driving the enemy from their outposts. On Monday a charge was made upon some heavy works of the enemy which were too strong for our troops. Stirring and fighting continued before Vicksburg and up the Yazoo river, near Harris Bluff, accompanied by the gunboats, until Saturday the 31st of January, when the commanding general, McClellan, arrived, called in the troops and embarked, starting northward on Sunday, leaving several gunboats at the mouth of the Yazoo.

The reports of Sherman was complete. He expected to meet, but few troops at Vicksburg, and anticipated an easy triumph. But Pemberton had left the front of Grant's army and arrived in Vicksburg by railroad before Sullivan. The attack of the latter was premature, but he thought to have made a brilliant thing of it, and have all the glory to himself; hence he did not wait for Banks and Farragut.

The loss in this disastrous affair is reported at 600 killed, 1600 wounded and 1000 missing.

The latest accounts from the expedition inform us that it had reached Napoleon, in Arkansas, where it was resting, and where it will be reorganized and be put into fighting condition. It is reported that General Grant is marching his army to Memphis, and vigorous preparations are being made for another attack upon Vicksburg, with a force strong enough to overcome any resistance the rebels may offer.

County Board of Supervisors.

MONDAY, AFTERNOON, JAN. 12.

The board met pursuant to adjournment, and several claims were presented and referred.

The bill of Levi Alden, clerk of the court, for $70.22 was reported correct and allowed.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

TUESDAY MORNING, JAN. 13.

The board met pursuant to adjournment. On motion of Mr. Earle, the clerk of the board was instructed to furnish to the chairman of the town boards of supervisors and each justice of the peace in the county a copy of the amended rules of the board.

The committee on justices and constables' accounts reported in favor of bills amounting to $91.75, including $55.76 from H. N. Comstock, police justice of the city of Janesville. Adopted.

Two bills were rejected on account of informality.

The committee on court expenses reported in favor of witness fees amounting to $85.33, and against the claims for witness fees in the defense of a criminal prosecution presented last Saturday.

Mr. Parker moved that the bills of the sheriff of Jefferson county be returned to him for correction, together with a copy of the rules of the board. Adopted.

The committee on sheriff's and jailers' accounts reported in favor of paying bills amounting to $10.41. Adopted.

Adjourned to 2 o'clock P. M.

OFFICERS OF THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The following officers were elected last evening, having been previously nominated at a meeting of delegates from the fire companies of the city: D. H. McChesney, president; James Shearer, vice president; A. D. Stoddard, treasurer; R. W. Rothrock, secretary; and D. W. Inman, collector.

Correspondence of the Daily Gazette. From the 33d Regiment.

FOUR MILES SOUTH OF WATERFORD, MISS., December 21st, 1862.

Editors Gazette: Since my last, but little of interest has transpired in our regiment. We have pursued a fruitless search after Price, and are at last constrained to abandon the chase. On the 12th inst., we had reached a point ten miles south of Oxford, where we received intelligence that Holly Springs was in the hands of the rebels, and that all our commissary stores were either burned or appropriated, together with the total destruction of a heavy mail for the thirteenth army corps. The deplorables were supposed to be led by the notorious Van Dorn. So with the pleasing prospect of entrapping the guerrilla, we were ordered to counter-march back to Oxford, and from there, as was supposed, to Holly Springs. In a short time the whole of Grant's great army of forty thousand men were moving northward. The advance of our forces was found to be sufficient to hold the Springs, the rebels having skedaddled with their booty, consisting in part of near one million dollars in greenbacks, which they took from cotton buyers. It was supposed that Price would about face and harass our rear, but was not heard from, nor do I believe his whereabouts to be known. It is difficult to surmise Grant's policy at present, or what it has been. It is at least quite certain that we have effected nothing, and yet he claims that he has accomplished all he set out to.

Never have I witnessed more beautiful weather at the present season of the year, and the roads have been passable most of the time, and yet we have experienced nothing but halts and delays. There is an earnestness prevailing this whole army corps, that will never allow it to accomplish any thing. It must be shaken off, for our inertia seems to be our greatest opponent, and the demoralization attendant upon its nature is vitiating in the extreme, for dull delay is sure to breed impotence and fear. We have men enough to cope with any force the rebels can probably bring against us here. In fact we have too many to be properly wielded by a general of moderate abilities. For rapid movements, a small force is always preferable to a large one. When a general allows one irreparable blunder to succeed an other, it is as sure to follow as the day the night, that his men will lose confidence in his ability. Why in the name of heaven not let us fight or send us home. The play of war should be played out by this time, it never before. We are disgusted with our dilatory motions, and hold in sovereign contempt men that can, but will not, inaugurate a more energetic policy. If there is any change of feeling in regard to the special institution, 'tis not apparent to the casual observer, for men in high places still bow at the shrine of the almighty idol with more than an eastern devotion. I wish, sir, I could tell you all I know and feel; but I must not compromise myself. Suffice it to say, that there is but one opinion in this army corps—that we have been out generalized here, and that mountebanks usurp the palaces of the gods quite as often in the army as in social and political life. Our base of supplies being cut off, a train of wagons has been sent to Memphis for provisions, and will probably return in about a week, if it is not taken by the enemy. We shall continue on scant half rations until its return, and will then probably set out for Chattanooga, Tennessee.

We have had no mail since leaving Memphis, more than a month ago, nor is there any encouraging prospect of receiving one, so that we have no knowledge of what is going on outside of our lines, and have only the felicity of indulging in conjectures and feeding on vague rumors. We hear something of a peace, or propositions to that effect on the part of the rebels; that Richmond and Vicksburg are ours; that papers are suppressed in the army, (which we believe), and that we shall soon be mustered out and sent home! I have much more to write, but will not trespass further on your patience.

Jackson on Color.

This is the 8th of January, and, according to long-established custom, the Tammany Society of Seymour democrats will commemorate the Battle of New Orleans, and grow eloquent over the unadulterated and unquestioned democracy of that old Roman, General Andrew Jackson. Let it not be forgotten that this is the same General Jackson who suspended the liberty of the press in New Orleans, kept the city under martial law even after the British had been whipped off, arrested Judge Hall for presuming to issue a writ of habeas corpus, enlisted, armed, and fought a battalion of negroes, and paid them the following generous and manly compliment in a special order:

On Sunday, December 13, 1814 [See Niles' Register, Vol. 7.] General Jackson reviewed the militia of the City of New Orleans, the battalion commanded by Major Planchet, and a part of the regiment of men of color. Being drawn up on their respective parades, the following addresses were read to them by Mr. Livingston, one of his aids:

[We omit the address to the white soldiers.]

TO THE MEN OF COLOR.

Soldiers! From the shores of Mobile I collected you to arms. I invited you to share in the perils and to divide the glory of your countrymen. I expected much from you, for I was not uninformed of those qualities which must render you so formidable to an invading foe. I knew that you could endure hunger and thirst, and all the hardships of war. I knew that you loved the land of your nativity, and that, like me, you had to defend all that is most dear to man, but you surpass us in more.

I have found in you, united to each other, the perils and to divide the glory of your countrymen. THE BATTLE OF MURFREESBORO. Graphic Description of the Battle of Thursday and Friday.

We have given an account of the fighting near Murfreesboro up to Wednesday night, the 31st ult., when the Cincinnati Gazette had the honor of carrying the subsequent fighting, taken from the same paper:

FIELD REPORT MURFREESBORO, January 2, 1863.

In my last letter I left the contending hosts reposing on their arms after the great struggle of Wednesday, Dec. 31st. There was but little alarm after the battle, and comparatively little uneasiness, each army, thinking, doubtless, that its opponent was too much exhausted to care about renewing the strife.

On Thursday morning the sun rose in a sky without clouds; but along the eastern horizon was a broad zone of mist and fog, seen through which was the great luminary red and blue, and in sympathy with the horrors of the battle field.

It was just eight o'clock when the roar of cannon recommenced with a terrible significance unknown before. A skirmish had begun between the pickets in front of Palmer's lines and those of the enemy. Our batteries immediately commenced shelling the woods from which the rebel fire proceeded. Two dozen pieces of the enemy's artillery opened in reply, and having by this time accurately obtained the range of the elevated ground between the pickets and railroad, upon which so many of our troops were massed, their guns were worked with greater effect than ever before.

Every form of shell, schrapnel, round shot, spherical case and oblong shot, were hurled in most unpleasant profusion over the field. Our infantry, unable to take any part in this terrible duel, lay close upon the ground, the fiery missiles continually whizzing and bursting over their heads, and tearing up the earth around and amongst them. It is wonderful that so few were injured by the iron tempest, yet there were scarcely a regiment all along the line, and that not that they were not, but that the members killed or wounded. The 8th Indiana battery, J. A. Estep commanding, was moved nearest the rebel lines and did great service in finally silencing the enemy's guns. When the firing ceased, however, several of its brave men were wounded, one of the horses was disabled, and some of the drivers were killed or wounded.

By hand, in all we lost about one hundred men; but we had the satisfaction of hearing from rebel prisoners, who were taken next day, a statement that the fire from our batteries was exceedingly effective, and an acknowledgment that their artillery was decidedly inferior to our own. But, after all this success of ours, it is needless to deny that a general glow of despondency was beginning to spread in the army, and that the men were beginning to feel that the day of the 31st had changed our line of battle upon the right. The scattered battalions of Johnson and Davis, as well as the somewhat less fatally broken remnants of Sheridan, were re-collected as well as possible, and ranged in line of battle, no longer at right angles with the turnpike, and sweeping round toward the town, but almost parallel with the pike, and thrown back away in the direction of Stewart's creek.

Our center and left were not so much affected by the withdrawal, to record with this new arrangement of the right, and it seemed to many that we had everywhere been pushed back. The army was weakened by its long list of casualties, by over four thousand captured, and by more than that number of stragglers who had shamefully deserted their comrades in the hour of their necessity, and skulked away from the field.

The men tried to flatter themselves with tales of the arrival of reinforcements, but almost the better informed all knew that the last available division was even now on the field, and that all the fresh men who could possibly be brought up, would, as far as numbers are concerned, amount to a mere handful. In point of fact, the reinforcements received during the day consisted of only two brigades—Walker's, of Fry's division, and Starkweather's, of Rosecrank's.

I know that the latter could be depended on as against twice their number, but what, after all, was the use of that? The new force of the enemy early in the morning to occupy the right wing, the impudent cavalry charge around to our left the evening before, the heavy cannonade on the center at eight o'clock, the continual reports that were brought in of rebel raids between Murfreesboro and Nashville, and the capture of our wagon trains in that direction, the occasional booming of cannon away off to the rear, the whizzing of bullets over the field from almost every point of the compass, all these things tended to produce a sinking of hearts amongst the soldiers, consequent upon the general impression they created that we were surrounded on all sides by an enemy vastly superior in numbers, and that our supplies, even now grown very scanty, would soon cease altogether, and that starvation, rout, ruin and retreat were actually staring us in the face.

When this fierce cannonade took place in the morning, it is useless to deny that a feeling of consternation and dismay took possession of many who are unused to fear, and that the opinion began to gain ground that Gen. Rosecrank had given up the contest, and was drawing in his line in preparation for falling back to Nashville.

What a New Year's morn'g was that? Yet there were undaunted souls there who maintained a steadfast cheerfulness even amidst the general gloom which smiled whenever they met a well known comrade, and shouted "Happy New Year!" even amid the appalling thunders of the cannonade.

At the time the first guns were fired in the morning, I was myself in the rear where I had gone to visit one of the hospitals. It was not until about two miles from the battle field that the echo of the cannon reached their ears, there was a number of pusillanimous events which turned their faces in an opposite direction from that whence the sound proceeded, and began to move away through the woods. I was astonished at the suddenness with which they came into sight. From behind rocks, trees, stumps, where I had not before suspected the presence of any one, they stepped up on the shoulders of the artillerists, some with guns and some without guns, and walked off, deliberately abandoning their comrades, who they knew were about to recommence a deadly struggle with the foe of the nation and of mankind. Oh, it was a shameful sight! and for such recreant wretches no punishment can be too severe.

THE FIRST LINE THAT OF TUESDAY.

The artillery battle over, there was hardly a circumstance which after the previous day's tremendous scenes, would be noted by any one; and the day passed like Tuesday, in a series of interminable skirmishes, with a constant, prolonged, and most exhausting expenditure of the instant powder of the battle. Only once did the repeated and dropping discharge of musketry swell into a roar; and that was between one and two o'clock, when the enemy's pickets advanced upon the right, and opened up a brisk fire upon Johnson's and Davis' men. The latter, however, anxious for an opportunity to retrieve the reputation lost the day before, returned with interest the snappy salute of the rebels, and sent them back into their cedar thickets, minus a score or two of their number.

LOOMIS' PAROIS.

Late in the afternoon a body of rebel cavalry appeared on the summit of the slope, in the neighborhood of the brick house which was burned on Monday. It was a slight warning which Loomis turned to a couple of his famous "Paroisses" in that Gazette. Had the Colonel carried them all the way in his hands and dropped them down, he could not apparently have deposited them more accurately in the exact spot he waited, than his long range cannon did. Their course through the air and their fall in the midst of the rebel squadrons, resembled nothing so much as the flight of a bird, trained to wing its way in a special direction, and light upon a particular spot. The stampele and the diversion of the rebels consequent upon this splendid artillery practice was witnessed with great satisfaction by a troop of officers, and Gen. Palmer highly complimented the Colonel and the battery upon the spot.

The events of the day were now over, and the army, (except the wounded), passed an uneventful and cheerless night as that which preceded it.

FRIDAY'S REPORT.

At precisely the same hour on Friday morning as on the day before, the thunder of artillery called all the troops to arms. This time it was the rebel batteries that commenced the fight; but our artillerists were not slow in replying to them, and for about twenty minutes the country for miles around resounded with a continual roar. Then the firing ceased, and by mutual consent both sides went off to repair damages; although during the course of the affair a rebel gun was dismounted, and the battery to which it belonged silenced.

THE ARMY IS BETTER SUPPLIED.

The army folk, in somewhat better spirits this morning, it was evident from the events of the last twenty-four hours that the rebel leaders were exceedingly diffident about renewing the battle, even with the advantage of the twenty six guns, which they captured from us on Wednesday. The news had also spread through the camp of Van Dorn's division, having been sent across the river the evening before, and this completely demoralized the rebel ranks. There were three things, however, which still depressed their spirits—the actual scarcity of food, the prospect that communication with Nashville would be cut off entirely, and a lie which the rebels' taken prisoners began to circulate, by instructions from their leaders, namely: that Bragg had received large reinforcements from Richmond.

Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the tone of the army was every day becoming more marked the dissolution of the rebel to renew the struggle, and I comprehended how completely the master mind of Rosecrank held all his forces under control. "Reinforced confidence beget fresh courage, and I felt sure that any engagement with the foe that day, would result in a signal triumph for our arms.

REBELS FEEL OUR POSITION.

Hour after hour the enemy kept feeling around our lines, as if he were trying to discover a weak and unsupported place, upon which he might break through. Much apprehension was felt lest he should again assail the right, and gain what had so long seemed to be one of his objects, possession of the Murfreesboro road in our rear. Those, however, who knew the situation of Van Dorn's division upon the other side of the river, felt certain that when the rebel assault did come, it would fall upon the extreme left.

Last Night's Report.

St. Louis, Jan. 11.

To Gen. Halleck.—Have good news from Springfield. Our troops were repulsed the rebels, and we hold the place. The rebels were retreating. I have three columns going towards them. Gen. Brown loses an arm. Col. Crab of the 19th Iowa regiment succeeds him in command. The troops, including the enrolled militia, behaved nobly.

(Signed) S. R. CURTIS, Major General.

New York, Jan. 11.

The steamer Creole arrived to night from New Orleans the 3d. She brings dispatches to Gen. Halleck. She passed several gunboats, and the Union was captured near Mer Rouge, with troops at Southwest Pass; also gunboat Kensington.

Parker Cook, reports, by the arrival of the gunboat Clifton at Southwest Pass, the evening of the 3d: "I learn that, early on the morning of the 1st, the rebels made an attack by land and water on the federal forces at Galveston. Our gunboats were attacked by five rebel steamers, protected by double rows of bales of cotton, loaded with troops armed with rifles and muskets. The rebels were repulsed, and the Union gunboats, under the command of Capt. Wainwright, Lieut. Lee, and the crew, 130 all told, had been killed by musketry from the rebel steamers. My informant states that but one or two of the officers and but 13 or 15 of the crew escaped death."

The gunboats Clifton and Owassa were engaged and escaped, the former losing no men and but one wounded. The Owassa lost one killed and 13 wounded. Two barks, loaded with coal, fell into the hands of the enemy.

The Westfield, the flagship of Com. Ronshaw, was not engaged before ashore in another channel. Her crew were transferred to transports, and Com. Ronshaw, fearing she would fall into the hands of the rebels, blew her up. By some mismanagement or accident, the explosion occurred before she was towed into the harbor. Ronshaw, Zimmerman and the boat's crew got away, and they were consequently blown up with the ship. The crew of the Westfield arrived at New Orleans on transports, and the remaining troops are on the way back. They did not arrive until the place had been evacuated. All the fleet are on the way to New Orleans.

The rebel force was estimated at about 5,000, under Gen. Magruder. Our land force, under command of Col. Barrell, had probably not more than 300. The rebels, not having arrived or not being estimated in time to fight. Our loss is estimated at from 150 to 350 killed, and 200 taken prisoners, the navy suffering most. It is thought the rebel loss was much more, as our guns were firing grape and canister continually in their midst. The rebels had small batteries on shore.

The federal troops were on one of the long wharves, and it is said, repulsed charges of the rebels before they surrendered.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.

A private letter, received here, Paris, Dec. 11th, states that the impression among the French is that the policy of Drouin du Hays cannot last, and that a change of ministry is not unlikely before February; that, at the last council at the Tuilleries, the President's message was pronounced wise and all the south could say. Upon the same authority the letter states that the Emperor has abandoned his penchant for the south.
